Mr. Joe Johnson Urges in an Advertisement That All Such Stay Away Until

After Six o'Clock-Explains That

His Patrons Object to Being Exhibits. The beautiful Mr. Johnson, the landlord of the Subway Tavern, astonished many of the patrons of his establishment yesterday by causing the following advertisement to be printed:

SUBWAY TAVERN—Bleecker station. Subway. Strangers not welcome till 6 P. M. (Patrons object to being onleghibition.) Come to Rathskeller and be one of us. Alc. Music.

"What does it mean?" he repeated yesterday after an interviewer. "Just what it

Mr. Johnson went on to explain that when he said "visitors" in the advertisement, he meant visitors and not people who came in search of drink, food, comfort, and intellectual support. Visitors were people who came to see what the Subway Tavern looked like; sometimes they tried to disguise themselves by buying drinks, or more often cigars or ice cream.

The Tavern was not built, said the beautiful boss, for sightseers, but to give the business men and working people in the vicinity a normal, reasonable, cheerful, clean place of refreshing themselves. Visitors who were generally of a hostile turn of mind did not conduce to the ideal atmos-

"How," asked the beautiful Mr. Johnson, would you like the taste of a glass of beer, if at the moment you were lifting it to your lips Mrs. Grannis came flouncing through the swinging doors and began peering around one side of you and then the other

"I wonder why the poor man drinks. It is beer he is drinking, isn't it? How much better it would be for him if he would throw away the dreadful stuff and drink nice, pure milk.

And then she trots down to the bartender and says: 'Of course, this is such a Christian place, you advised that man to drink milk before you put that dreadful beer into his hands, didn't you, now?'

"You might stay and finish your beer. But you wouldn't come again. And we feel obliged to protect our patrons from that sort of thing. We have issued orders that sort of thing. We have issued orders now that no woman shall be admitted to the barroom under any circumstances. Nothing but ouriosity ever brought them in here, and that is not what the place was established to satisfy."

The manager of the salcon then added his tale of woe. He told how occasional visitors stopped at the desk and pointed out a customer sitting in the reading room and wondered out loud why such a neat, intelligent looking young man was sitting there looking sad. Wasn't it likely that there was a great life tragedy behind his apparent carelessness?

The prize visitor was one who came in clerical garb the other day and strode into the middle of the floor and sniffed.

"Sir," said he in deep and imprecative tones to the manager, "is this the place where no drunkard is served with strong drink?"

"Yes, sir," said the manager.

"the grey wouldn't let a drunkard come where no drunkard is served with strong drink?"

"Yes, sir," said the manager.

"And you wouldn't let a drunkard come in here?"

"We couldn't help his coming in, sir," said the manager, "but we would ask him to go out again at once."

"And, of course, no man ever got drunk in here?"

"We believe not, sir," said the manager.

The clergyman leveled a long and accusing arm at a regular customer of the saloon who had stopped in on his way here from work for his nightly glass of beer.

The customer was leaning heavily on the bar and his head was bowed on one hand. He always stood at the bar that way, and usually spent at least twenty minutes drinking one glass of beer.

"Look at that poor sot!" roared the clergyman. "You would have the effrontery to tell me that he was not drunk, that his soul was not made sodden by your hell fire, that he was one of those for whom you and the Bishop are providing a poor man's cub! It is just what I thought of the whole business and I shall tell the Bishop so. I tell you that black as is the blot on that man's soul, the hand that put it there is blacker!"

"But, sir," said the manager as soon as he could get in a word, "he is a regular customer here and he may not care to have you comment on him, especially as he is quite sober. He may not care to be pointed at."

pointed at."
"Do you dare to rebuke me, you, "shouted the clergymen, "when I am on God's errand?" "You wouldn't like me to get up in your church, would you," asked the manager, "and point out some man who was asleep in the niddle of your sermon and ask.—"
"Drunkenness, impertinence, brutishness and irreverence!" said the clergyman, and fied.

man, and fied.

People who want to go down and sit in the Tavern Rathskeller, just to be able to say when they go back to Kalamazoo that hey have been in the Subway Tavern, will be welcomed after 6 o'clock. It is hoped that they will not mind having some of the people from the neighborhood shout "Come right in, ladies and gents: come right in and see the animals fed." Mr. Johnson is willing to admit a certain legitimacy willing to admit a certain legitimacy public interest in his enterprise, but annot let it interfere with the day

THE BOER WAR SPECTACLE

opening on Friday complete renearsals will be held for the purpose of gaining smoothness in the new features.

The spectacle will be produced with doubte the number of people used at the St. Iouis exposition and with 650 additional mounts. The new performers comprise the Irish Brigade, Boer women who fought side by side with husbands, sons and prothers during the war: Capadian socuts.

side by side with husbands, sons and brothers during the war; Canadian scouts and led Cross nurses. The ranks of the Boer ravalry, infantry and artillery corps, the British Lancers, Highlanders and Marirs have been doubled.

Mis Nellie Mare, daughter of Commandant Mare, will reenact in the spectacle the rile of Red Cross nurse in which she endeared herself to the Boer army during the var. Miss Mare was a mere child during the war and has been in school in this lountry since the other members of her family, all of whom take part in the her amily, all of whom take part in the prodiction, have been here.

BAPTIST UPRISING COMING

To Protest Against "Tainted Money"-So Says the Rev. Mr. Johnson.

PITSFIELD, Mass., May 23.-According to the Rev. Herbert G. Johnson, pastor of the Varren Avenue Baptist Church of Bostor, the first minister to protest against John D. Rockefeller's donations to the churcles, an organized revolt among Baptist ninisters against Mr. Rockefeller's gifts to Baptist institutions is coming. In an interview here to-day Mr. Johnson said:

"While the masses of Baptists are not affected with the feeling of protest, nevertheless to my knowledge there are Baptist ministers all over the United States who are read; to unite in a public protest. I believe his protest will be made. It is not a sparadic uprising but part of a movement caculated to change the standard of ethics in the churches of the United States. The movement will crystalize soon. States. The movement will crystalize soon. These as facts which no newspaper has linted at before this because it was not known hat such a plan was on."

Said an actress who played in the first cast of "The County Chairman:"

"We used to be very much afraid of George Ade at rehearsals. Not that he was ever disagrecable, but he was so distant and quiet. He never took the least notice of the actors. I used to say to the other girls that it was just as well, because he'd probably say something very clever, and we'd never know how to answer him.

"One day, though, I was sitting on a cos tume basket when Mr. Ade came and sat down beside me. I was frightened nearly to death. He didn't open his mouth for maybe a minute. Then he turned and said:

"Which would you rather be—a literary man or a burglar?"

"I gave him the first thing that came into my head.

"What's the difference?' said I."

The backward May weather has one thing at least in its favor. Oysters are still good. They usually disappear as seasonable from the bills of fare of first class hotels and restaurants and clubs by May 1, but this year they are still being served. Furthermore, they are as plump and tasty as in midwinter.

There was a big crowd on the street corner as the car stopped and two women started to say good-by. They weren't going to see each other for a week and had "such an awful lot to say." Then they embraced and the conductor un-feelingly shouted:

"Step lively, please!"

The blonde stepped aboard and the bru-

The blande stepped aboard and the brunette said:
"Oh, Jenny, there's something else I wanted to say, but it's a secret and I don't want anybody but you in the world to know it." The car jerked forward and she called out: "I'll drop you a postal in the morning telling you all about it. Remember, mum's the word!"

A street faker, selling a line of "bazoo" whistles-the kind you play by singing a tune through them-has formed a combination with an Italian organ grinder. They "do" the residence district, the organ grinding out its tunes and the faker playing them on his bazoo. When the organ grinder stops to pass the hat, the faker grinder stops to pass the hat, the faker spiels. Of course, every boy who can raise a nickel buys a whistle. Then they all fall in around the organ and join in the next tune. Last week the faker and the hand organ man marched up Lexington avenue heading a procession of 200 small boys, all playing "Wearing o' the Green." The partners are getting rich.

Prof. Dewey was formerly a member of the faculty of the University of Michigan, where they tell this story:

The professor was working in his study one day when water began to trickle through the ceiling. He ran upstairs to see what was the matter and found his young hopeful in the bathroom with the floor flooded. Prof. Dewey was about to express his feelings, when the youngster piped out:

"Don't say a word, John, but get a mop."

An amusing instance of how cross-eximiners are sometime victims occurred recently at the trial of an action before Supreme Court Justice Fitzgerald. The suit was for the dissolution of a partnership, and the physical possession of a typewriting machine was involved in the evidence. The witness had testified on direct examination that the machine was not in the firm's offices on a certain day. Then the opposing law-yer took him in hand.
"So you mean to swear, Mr. Witness, that this typewriter was not in the office on this particular day?"

"I certainly do," was the answer.

"And you're just as positive of that state ment as of all your other evidence?

"Now, just tell us how you know that the "Now, just tell us how you know that the machine was not there," continued the lawyer, in his most insinuating way.
"Well," drawled the witness, "I happened to be sitting on the typewriting table a good part of that day, and I know blame well there weren't nothing under me."

Poverty compels odd expedients in many minor necessities of life, such as the drying of handkerchiefs by sticking them up against the windows in the bachelor bedroom. A young man stood in the bright sunlight on the bridge pronenade the other day contentedly reading a newspaper while waiting for sun and air to dry out the three white handkerchiefs he had pressed out on the iron side rail. It was a case of necessity, no doubt, but it seemed nervy to use the big bridge as a clothes-

BOOKS AND AUTHORS.

Rex E. Beach, in addition to being an author and a business man, is an explorer and an athlete. He went out to Alaska with the first mad rush of the gold seekers and brought impressions of the country and a picturesque vocabulary which he has used to advantage in his new novel, "Pardners." He holds the indoor record of 100 yards in swimming and was the winner of the mile handicap swimming race at the Olympian games in St. Louis. He is classed among the new school of humorists, bringing out in a breezy, hearty style the more amusing side of existence in the frozen North or on the Northern cattle plains.

Miss Mary Cholmondeley's father, who has recently died at the age of 85 years. was one of the few remaining specimens of the hunting parsons. It is a distinguished family, of which the head is now Lord Delamere. It was the late Mr. Bentley who "discovered" Miss Cholmondeley, whose book "Red Pottage" caused a literary sensation when it appeared. Mr. Bentley was so impressed with a short story written in the Temple Bar that he invited further work from her pen, upon which she produced "Sir Charles Danvers" and "Diana Tempest." Seven years later she wrote "Red Pottage," spending three years over the book, which had an enormous sale and established the popularity of the author.

Amelie Rives is another of the authors, like Gertrude Atherton, Kate Douglas Wiggin and Mrs. Frances Hodgson Burnett. who find the atmosphere of New York not conducive to literary effort. "Oh, what a distracting, fearful, grinding place," she said recently. "I feel when I'm here, which is very rarely, as if I were in a network of cross currents, intangible, unat-tainable, nothing that the mind can seize or settle upon. There is nothing here but a great hollow metallic roar." Amelle Rives's visit to New York was a brief one, made on her way to Europe. She divides her time between the home of her childhood, in Virginia, and the estate of her husband, Prince Troubetzkoy, on the shore of Lake Maygiore in Italy, where she wrote her recently published poem, "Selene."

"The Little Conscript," by Esro S. Brudno, which will be published on May 27, is a novel of Russia at the present time and gives an intimate picture of Russian military and peasant life, the conditions in the army and the methods adopted to recruit it by force and fraud. There is also an analysis of the Russian peasant's character, which reveals him as a slave of temperamental weakness and superstition. Mr. Brudno will be remembered by his first book, "The Fugitive."

The biography of John Knox, by Henry Cowan, D. D., in the Heroes of the Reformation Series, appears this month on the 400th anniversary of the birth of the famous Scotch reformer. The day will be celebrated in Edinburgh by a great assembly of the Church of Scotland.

Felix Adler's new book "The Religion of Duty" will be printed May 24. This volume of selections from the speeches and addresses of the founder and leader of the Ethical Culture Society gives to the ideals and principles of the ethical culture movement the most complete expression they have yet had and points out the essential difference between ethical culture societies and the churches.

Frederick Upham Adams's new golf novel, entitled "John Henry Smith," will be published on May 27. The action of the story takes place in the open and a romance develops on the links in which millionaires, philosophical farmers, a remarkable "hired man" and pretty girls figure. An incidental feature of the story which is told with the whimsical humor which characterized "The Kidnapped Millionaires" is a duel between a Panhard motor car and a bull, in which the result belongs to the story and not to the announcement.

Mr. Rider Haggard's "A Gardener's Year" is of peculiar interest in that it is a record of the year's work done in his own gardens at Ditchingham and Kessingland. The author is his own head gardener and nothing is done in the garden without his personal supervision, while he often lends a hand to the carrying out of his plans. With three acres of garden under cultivation, Mr. Haggard's staff consists only of three regular men, with frequent use of a fourth-the owner himself. There are six glass houses, in which he grows prize orchids; a highly cultivated kitchen garden. orchard, tennis court and croquet ground. and two ponds in which the author-gardener grows aquatic plants.

Literary explorers after fresh material eem to have settled upon Labrador and northwestern Canada and Alaska as most rich in possibilities so far as America is concerned, while in the opposite hemisphere the Far East still focuses literary attention. Having exhausted Japan in the great wave of war books, the leaders, with prophetic foresight, are pushing on with China. It is surely not simply a coincidence but rather a significant fact that three efforts to interpret the Chinese mind in terms of fiction should have been made simultaneously. Mr. Norris in "Rice Papers" finds the Chinaman with his strange mingling of childishness and shrewdness, equanimity and cruelty an extremely interesting study. Mr. Oliver S. Ready's tale of Chinese love and tragedy, "Chun-Kwang," is written with an intimate knowledge of Chinese manners, etiquette and superstition, and is illustrated by a Chinese artist with excellent examples of Chinese art. The third book, "The Mirror of Kong-Ho," purports to give in the form of letters to the writer's father in China the experiences of a Chinaman in a Bloomsburg boarding house, and is really a veiled satire against British insular limitations.

An important forthcoming art book is "The Pre-Raphaelite Brotherhood," by W. Holman Hunt. It will be published by the Macmillans, in a uniform edition with the recent biography of Edward Burne Jones, a famous member of the brotherhood, and will be illustrated with photogravures.

Richard Le Gallienne's "Ode From the Divan of Hafiz," which was privately printed by the author in 1903 and elicited high praise from those who secured copies, is about to be presented to the general public in book form. The London Spectator critic wrote of it as "the quintessence of lyric poetry-a work of consummate art and one of the very best volumes of English love poetry I have ever read."

This is not the only period of best sellers and remarkable book issues. Scheffel's story of German knighthood in the Middle Ages, entitled "Ekkehard," brought out fifty years ago, has been published in the original in seven editions, representing approximately 3,000,000 copies. This does not include the French, Dutch, Danish and English translations.

A new novel by Maurice Hewlett is promised for the autumn publications and is said to resemble "Forest Lovers" more than Wardrobe Trunks. any of his other books. The title is not yet

A ROEBLING ON HIS TRAVELS.

NOTHING THE MATTER WITH SIEGFRIED, JUST A FAMILY TRAIT

Note Said He Was Going on a Tramp -When He Is Found His Grandfather May Put Him on a Steamship With a Good Captain and Let Him See the World

TRENTON, N. J., May 23 .- Col. Washington A. Roebling said to-night that the disappearance of his grandson, Siegfried Roebling, from the school he was attending at Ashevil'e, N. C., was nothing more than another example of a roving nature which, according to the Colonel, is an inheritance of the Roebling family While not alarmed by the d'sappearance of his grandson, col. Roebling said that no efforts would be spared to discover his whereabouts. His escription will be generally circulated.

The theory that the boy had been kidnaped was scouted by Col. Roebling from the beginning, and the correctness of his surmise was proved to-night when Mrs. Edward S. McIlvaine of this city, the grandmother of Siegfried, received from he boy's mother the following telegram:

"Siegfried left note saying he was going to tramp through the country and would be back before the end of June. Know nothing more.' Col. Roebling gives his grandson a shorter stay at large, believing that he will return home as soon as his funds give out, and as the boy is only 141/2 years old, and not in the habit of carrying any considerable sum, he believes a much shorter time will elapse before he puts in an appearance. The Colonel is inclined to think the boy may have started for Trenton, as he and his grandson were quite good chums and traveled together most of last summer.

At that time Col. Roebling found the roving disposition so strongly developed in Siegfried that when it was time to come home he supplied the boy with money and told him to come home when he was ready. "I have only two grandsons," said Col. Roebling, "and I can't afford to lose either of them, so when Siegfried comes back I think the best thing to do will be to put him on a steamer with a good captain and let him have a good taste of roughing things for five or six months." Col. Roebling likened his grandson to his brother Edmund, who was the traveler of the family. One day he arose from the dinner table, saying he was going to get a handkerchief. Four weeks later he returned, the family being again seated at the table, and said he had found the handkerchief. He had been to England in the mean time without a word to any one as to his whereabouts.

Col. Roebling described Siegfried as a well built boy, 5 feet 8 inches tall, large for his age, and of handsome appearance. A distinguishing feature is a lock of white hair on the right side of the boy's head just under the hat rim in the back. Detectives have been employed to search for the youth.

Power to Continue the Business. Frederick A. Constable, who died on April 10 at Taormina, Sicily, left a will; filed for probate here yesterday. Mrs. Constable and a cousin, Walter C. M. Constable, are named as executors and trustees and they are empowered to continue the business of Arnold, Constable & Co. if they deem it advisable, or to dispose of the testator's interest in it at their discretion. Mrs. Constable, it is provided, may become a general or special partner in the firm if she chooses. The house at 9 East Eighty-third street roes to Mrs. Constable absolutely, together with the adjoining property and the stable and also the residence at Mamaroneck with its contents. One-half of the residuary estate goes to Mrs. Constable and the other half is to be held in trust for the daughters Marie and Edith, until they are 25 years d. The will was executed four years age. The value of the estate does not appear.

BAD BOY RAGES IN COURT. Kicks a Court Officer and Consigns Al Hands to Perdition.

The toughest boy that has been seen in General Sessions in a long time is Charley Gallaher, a diminutive lad, who had pleaded guilty to burglary and was arraigned yesterday for sentence. He told Judge Cowing that he would rather go to prison than the Elmira Reformatory, but the Judge de-cided that the reformatory was the best place for him. When the boy left the courtroom, stamping and raging, he kicked a six foot court officer, who was leading "To hell wid you all!" he shouted.

The Tyranny The Dark

Hamlin Garland's latest novel is a daring venture into a new and fascinating field-that of the occult. The remarkable incidents related in this volume are all within the experience of the author, who for a number of years has been a member of the American Psychical Society. Savs the New York World: "He has woven from his experiences the threads of a most interesting tale. It will interest both believers in and scoffers at the life invisible." In this strange setting, romance becomes doubly attractive. Mr. Garland has given us another delightful Western girl. Her rescue
